Dear Dr. Shin,

You don't need to be a professor to understand the value of public higher education in this country. Not even a Nobel Prize-winning one.

Even so, when our very own professor of Molecular and Cell Biology was awarded a Nobel Prize in October, do you know what he said to the world's media? Professor Randy Schekman decided to use his fifteen minutes of fame to stand up for public universities.

It was a powerful moment, because Randy diverted attention away from his own accomplishments and onto the daily realities that our teachers and students are facing. These are remarkable people doing remarkable things with very limited public funding.

State funding only covers about 10% of the university's costs. That makes supporter-funded programs like our Leadership Fund irreplaceable. They are immune to politics and compromise. Every dollar goes directly to teaching some of the most innovative courses anywhere.

I like to think that the generous people who donate to our Leadership Fund are actually making future Nobel Prize winners... people like Professor Schekman whose discoveries will go on to improve entire societies.

Randy donated all his Nobel Prize money to UC Berkeley. His wish—and mine—is that standing up for public education will inspire others to support what we're doing here, starting with you.

Sincerely,

Mark A. Richards
